

BRILLIANT COACHING

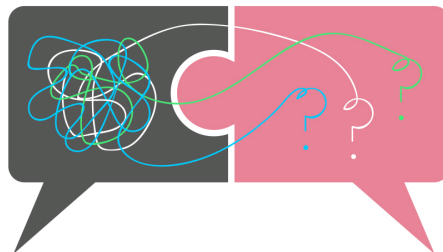

Transforming the way you lead

How do you make coaching brilliant?

1. You know how to build rapport and trust.
2. You know moment by moment whether to coach, mentor, direct or instruct.
3. You know how to adapt your approach to get the best from the person, the situation and the role.
4. You lead with the right questions not advice.
5. You manage silences effectively in coaching conversations.
6. You know the difference between helping others and developing others.
7. You trust the process of coaching.
8. You achieve creative breakthroughs in others.
9. You are equally confident coaching peers, students and line managers.
10. You demonstrate emotional intelligence.

You make coaching relational

Brilliant coaching isn't formulaic or scripted, it's relational. For exactly that reason, emotional intelligence is at the heart of this programme.

Over three days as a participant, you'll learn the knowledge, skills, attitudes and habits of emotional intelligence along with ways to adapt your approach as a leader. Combined and applied, these practices will make your coaching brilliant.

I find the small group size and virtual setting is even better than being together in one room, not least because the use of break out rooms for coaching practice in triads is really excellent.
